The gender categories useful for critical feminist analytical purposes need not be limited to, or even map onto, the genders familiar to us from the chair.

Nor must they anchor our authentic selves (gender categories vs. genders).

The analytical category pregnant persons consists of those who are systematically subordinated along some dimension (economic, political, legal, social, etc.) due to (actually or potentially) observed or imagined bodily features presumed (taken, suspected, expected, etc.) to be evidence of a (present, previous, or future) body socially interpreted as pregnant.
